Definitions:

Peer Reviewed: Peer-reviewed articles are typically written by academic experts (professors) with advanced degrees in their respective fields. In order to be published in academic journals, these articles are submitted through a rigorous process of review by other academic experts who determine if the article is appropriate for publication in the journal.

Periodical: Publications that are published periodically (weekly, monthly, biannually, annually, etc.) Some examples include: New York Times, Time Magazine, the Economist, and Forbes. Some are scholarly, or peer-reviewed. Some examples include: American Literature, Aboriginal History, Academic Radiology.

General Periodicals: Periodicals are not academic in nature but are written for an audience interested in a particular trade, such as business (Forbes Magazine) or nursing. (Nursing Times)
